JUNE 04, 2020 — In our current tumultuous times, Some Other Paris is an honest, unconventional glimpse of how all different walks of life can share the same streets.

Artists, musicians, poets, novelists, playwrights, journalists, radio hosts, gamers, charity workers, costume designers, rabbis and even a sign language tour guide are the subjects of this eccentric, whimsical and spellbinding documentary. French citizens, expats and immigrants alike share their views on everything from the Yellow Vest protests to the Parisian art scene. Their diverse experiences with the trials of city living, politics, money, religion, love and cheese paint an unusually candid picture of Paris, taking spectators far beyond the Eiffel tower.

Executive Produced by Kara Jewell, the film's charm is augmented by director James Jewell's not-so-behind-the-scenes presence. Asking questions on camera, chatting with the subjects and composing the soundtrack himself, his ingenious style brings a special warmth to the viewing experience.

“Paris can be a tumultuous lover – it gave us by turns a loving, adoring embrace, then misunderstanding and scorn and back again. One is forced to slow down because slowing down is necessary to survive life in Paris. There is a shared understanding that we are all in this together.” – Kara Jewell

SOME OTHER PARIS (100 mins) will be streaming on YOUTUBE starting June 18th. The film is available for press screenings online at <https://vimeo.com/424060028> Pw: Paris2020. James Jewell is available for interviews.
